

puretwister

another boring day at the office?

puretwister

If today's highlight has been a trip to the water cooler, read on...

So you've already done the tea run twice and even replied to your chain emails. Frankly, you're seriously contemplating 'accidentally' setting the fire alarm off.

Fear not - help is at hand (or foot, as the case may be). What you need is some good clean fun. And what better way to pass the time than a friendly game of twister.

Ok, for those unfamiliar with the nineties classic, don't panic, it's not rocket science. Just visit www.makeuspure.com, click the link and do as The Generator says. For example, a hand on a yellow circle means put your hand on a yellow circle. Take it in turns and pray you don't end up in too many compromising positions (or pray you do, depending on whether or not the hotty across the room is playing). Last man (or woman) standing, wins!

 CUT OUT THIS SECTION AND HAND TO YOUR MANAGER* - P45 TO FOLLOW.

*Supervision may be required

Clearly your staff have far too much time on their hands. Attract more business and eliminate the need for office boredom busters. Find out how at www.makeuspure.com

email: info@makeuspure.com

purecreative

To make the play area:

Cut along the dashed lines* and fix each disc to the floor, as follows:

FAQ

I don't have enough room to lay out the play area - what can I do?

- Try making the play area smaller, move the discs closer together to save space
- Tie up and gag your manager, then use their office space

